

SHUKUSHUKUMA BEADWORK PROJECT

PRICE LIST 2010

Shukushukuma, meaning “Busy Hands”, has local South African women making intricate beadwork using traditional methods to produce contemporary South African products.

Christine Fischer, a well-known Johannesburg bead-artist manages the beadwork project, focusing not only on teaching beading techniques to the women, but imparting essential knowledge pertaining to the whole process of running a small business. This includes guiding the women through the production process, understanding the associated costing and marketing, as well as an awareness of aesthetic sensibility in a drive towards entrepreneurial independence for the women.

On average 20 women are active within the project at any one time with over 100 having been trained since its inception in the latter half of 2002.
